The episode has caused a wave of revulsion across India. Demands have been growing to hold Union Carbide, an American-controlled multinational corporation, accountable. President Says U.S. Will Study Bishop's Ideas

WASHINGTON — President WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan conferred Friday with Bishop Desmond M. Tutu, a strong critic of Reagan administration policy in South Africa, and later said the U.S. State Department would look "very carefully" at suggestions by the bishop for promoting changes in Presorie's promoting changes in Pretoria's apartheid practices.

But Mr. Reagan disagreed with Bishop Tutu that the administration's policies were hurting South African blacks.

He ruled out changing what the administration calls its "constructive engagement" policy, which emphasizes quiet diplomatic persuasion in place of such actions as economic sanctions.

Bishop Tutu, who this year won the Nobel Peace Prize, said after the meetings with President Reagan and other top administration officials that "we are no nearer each other than before we entered the White House."

We agreed, in the words of the president, that apartheid is repug-nant," he said. "We agreed that the system should, as far as possible, be dismantled by peaceful means." Mr. Reagan invited Bishop Tutu to meet under growing pressure for a change in U.S. policy. Thirty-five conservative Republican members of the House, in a letter to South Africa's ambassador, Bernardus G. Fourie, vowed earlier in the week to seek diplomatic and economic sanctions unless the white-ruled government took steps to end

Bishop Tuni, meanwhile, told a congressional committee that the administration's policy was "evil, immoral and totally un-Christian." Mr. Reagan said Friday that he had explained to Bishop Tutu the actions that his administration had taken in opposition to apartheid,

"Some of the things he suggested are things we are already doing, but there were others our State Department has taken heed of and we are going to look at them very carefully," he told a news conference after Bishop Tutu said, "We hope very much that the administration would begin to send signals" that the oppressed in South Africa could take as signs of hope.

The Anglican bishop said the president should call for an end to the current violence in South Afritragedy," he said, "and knows its duty toward the thousands of inno- on bannines and forced population on bannings and forced population removal schemes, amnesty for all political prisoners and a national convention to draw up a blueprint for a new kind of society. A State Department official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the administration may speak out more often to condemm police violence in South Africa and the detention of labor leaders and political opponents there.

that 11 recently detained political prisoners in South Africa had been released. The Associated Press reported.

President Reagan immediately claimed credit. "This is the result of three weeks of work that we have put in in what I told you was quie diplomacy, and today it bore fruit in their release," he said. Asked whether the growing nationwide protest against South Africa's poli-cies, including the arrests of several members of Congress, might also have helped, Mr. Reagan replied, "I have no evidence of that."

In Ethiopia, Dawn Is the Time to Count the Dead

KOREM. Ethiopia — At dawn there is a light show in the mountains that ring the 45,000 highland peasants who have gathered here in retreat from Ethiopia's famine. Catching the sun, the denuded hills glow orange and magenta. After two or three minutes, the show ends and the hills are again the dead brown color of weathered shoes. It is just after the colors flash in the mountains that stretchers are dispatched in Korem's feeding camp to collect the dead. The temperature here at Ethiopia's largest famine relief center, perched on a plateau more than one and a half miles above sea level, usually falls below freezing around 4 A.M. The best guess by Ethiopian officials now is that there are 45,000, with 10,000 additional children in a separate feeding center about a mile from the main camp. About 500 new people arrive every day, walking in from as far as 150 miles (240 kilometers) away.

The death rate here has been cut by twothirds in the past two months, from more than 100 a day to about 35.

About 107,000 tons of food are due to arrive in Ethiopia in December, and, if there are no major distribution bottlenecks, Korem is likely to have enough food to continue to give at least 450 calories a day to everyone, about one-eighth of the consumption of the average American.

Presidential Yacht Gets a Safe Harbor

The Sequoia, the former yacht of presidents, is back at its dock in Washington, in safe harbor at last. The past few years have been hard on the 59year-old vessel. In 1977, President Jimmy Carter called it a frill, and in a grand — some said grandstanding — austerity gesture, ordered it auctioned

Richard W. Arendsee, a San Diego millionaire, bought the Sequoia for $1.1 million and leased it to the nonprofit Presidential Yacht Trust. After some turmoil, including an "admiral-ty attachment" for an unpaid $1,300 diesel-fuel bill, the Yacht Trust has been reorganized. It is preserving the Sequoia as a national historic treasure and is making the yacht available for official government entertaining. Although cabinet members and Pentagon officers have used the vessel, President Ron-ald Reagan hasn't. He prefers horseback riding. The Sequoia's skipper, Captain Giles M. Kelly, says he hopes the president "discover how attractive the Sequoia might be for getting

Percy's Loss in U.S. Senate Race Raises Questions Over Rules

By Claire Spiegel

Los Angeles Times Service
LOS ANGELES — The defeat of Senator Charles H. Percy, Republican of Illinois, in the Nov. 6 election sent tremors through the political landscape.

It was not only a political Waterloo for an 18-year veteran of the U.S. Senate who chaired the Foreign Relations Committee, it was a triumph for an obscure California

Setting up a residence in Chicago, Michael R. Goland, 37, launched his own advertising campaign, spending more than $1 million on mailings, billboards and commercials depicting Mr. Percy as a chameleon who changed colors to match the political landscape.

The case also has rekindled controversy over federal election laws. How much Mr. Goland spent is not clear. Federal election reports that he has filed show expenditures of $700,000. Mr. Goland's attorney, however, said that his client spent more than $1 million, and one of Mr. Goland's top employees said the figure was $1.6 million. Also unclear is why Mr. Goland chose to intervene.

Mr. Percy's supporters contend that Mr. Goland, who is active in Jewish causes, was part of an organized pro-Israeli campaign de signed to retaliate against Mr. Percy for his stand on Israel and especially for his vote to sell air-

Mr. Percy said "it would seem grossly unfair" that Mr. Goland could spend $1 million to $1.6 million for anti-Percy advertising, while contributors to political campaigns are limited to $1,000 each. The Washington Post reported from Washington.

He said there was "something wrong" in the fact that Illinois voters did not learn until after the election that the Federal Election Commission decided Oct. 2 there was "reason to believe" that Mr. Goland's spending violated the

U.S. Agency Found Food Violations on Many Airlines

By Irvin Molocsky New York Times Sernce

WASHINGTON - The Food and Drug Administration has nonfied all of the nation's passenger airlines that violations of regulations for handling food have been found on many airplanes. The agency urged the lines to improve their practices to avoid possible food poisoning.

The action resulted from an unannounced spot check of sirliners last summer at the three major airports serving the New York City area: Kennedy International, La Guardia and Newark Internation-al. The agency said that 21 airlines had one or more planes on which there were violations of rules on food handling.

The violations ranged from coffee remnants in trash containers to refrigerators that did not keep food cold enough to balt the growth of bacteria, something the agency said had been noted on 10 planes. No food poisoning deaths or serious illnesses were reported, and about 80 percent of the planes passed inspection with no violations found.

Donald C. McLearn, of the FDA's public affairs department said that inspectors in the agency's Brooklyn, New York, office had found that 142 aircraft in a sample of 166 craft had food on board. Of those, 28 planes belonging to the 21 airlines were sent the nonces of adverse findings and were asked to take corrective action.

Several factors prompted the checks, according to U.S. officials. One was food poisoning last summer aboard British Airways flights that caused many illnesses and one death. Another was the suspicious of investigators in the agency's re-gional office in Brooklya that they were finding a trend.

Impasse in El Salvador

A wave of pessimism has swept over the peace talks begun by the government and the rebels in El Salvador. The first round produced a touch of euphoria, but in the second round the two sides presented positions seemingly so unbridgeable as to raise doubt whether the talks can go on. The government of President José Napoleón Duarte kept to its maximum formula of expecting the guerrillas simply to join its existing political framework. and the rebels demanded not just to share power but also to divide the country into zones of current control. It is suggested that those who do not believe in a political solution are in control in both camps. The would-be conciliators are being left to try to keep the peace process alive by treating the lesser issues of "humanizing" the war — through such moves as declaring a Christmas truce. But do not be too quick to count the peace talks out. In the first round, both sides took an easy approach; in the second, a tough one. The switch and the all-or-nothing quality of each exchange indicates not so much the implausibility of negotiations as the inexperience of the negotiators. Peace has a public in El Salvador, among citizens of different political persuasions. The peace talks have a constituency among the politicians, who are under pressure to keep the process going. Foreign friends of the two sides, and in particular the nearby Latin countries most interested in winding down the war, will surely keep pressing for the talks to continue.

As always, the appearance of impasse itself becomes a factor. Each side would like to project a readiness to stay the course in the battlefield in order to make the talks succeed or to most them. But it is not only up to the principals; it is also up to the patrons. The record suggests that the impasse will soon produce voices in the United States calling upon the Duarte government to make the concessions necessary to get the talks moving.

The Reagan administration should be considering how to pre-empt this turn. The best way is to ensure the integrity of the elected government against challengers from its right. pecifically, it is essential to bolster President Duarte's efforts to subordinate the armed forces to his office, to keep reducing human rights abuses and to steal the right's political thunder by making the reforms work better. The leader of the extreme right, Roberto d'Au-buisson, was in Washington this past week insisting that the talks are dead and that he is the wave of his country's future. President Duarte believes otherwise, and the United States must help him prove so.

The Pentagon Dissidents

In the heart of the Pentagon lurks a brave band of dissidents, isolated by adherence to a creed their organization spurns — free enter-prise. The dissidents are highly placed, but do not be misled by their positions. Being on top in the Defense Department does not necessarily mean being in charge.

The most vigorous dissident is John Lebman, the secretary of the navy. He has told General Electric to share the technology for navy aircraft engines with Pratt & Whitney, its chief rival. His idea: Buying the engines from two sources will yield better price and quality. As Commodore Stuart Platt, the navy's first competition advocate, complained to the Senate on Wednesday: "Dealing with monopoly producers is not easy. They understand our options, at times better than we do."

Another believer in the market is Verne Orr, secretary of the air force. He has removed three-quarters of his order for aircraft engines from Pratt & Whitney, the sole source, and assigned it to General Electric. He plans to adjust the share each year so as to keep each contractor competing. William Taft, deputy secretary of defense, says he and his boss, Caspar Weinberger, are converts too. "The secretary of defense and I." he wrote us recently. "agree with you that increasing competition is the single most important thing to be done to hold down the cost of our defense programs."

But this Gang of Four has encountered opposition in the apple cart they would over-turn. Richard DeLauer, the outgoing undersecretary of defense, says competition would increase prices, not reduce them. He criticized Mr. Lehman's desire for two sources of aircraft engines, saying it could increase costs "due to reductions in rate and quantity, and increases in overhead at the individual contractors." In that case, how can competition ever be good? Is Mr. DeLauer repudiating the essence of free enterprise? Of course not; he just wants to maintain the Pentagon as a comfortable swamp of socialism in a free-market economy. Competition has so little place in the Defense Department's dealings with its contrac-tors because both sides find its absence convenient. The contractors are freed from market forces and the Pentagon's managers have a free hand to change and gold-plate weapons at their whim. Neither has to care about high prices and low quality.

The ideas of the Lehman-Orr-Taft-Weinberger clique could revolutionize the Pentagon, forcing contractors to make cheaper weapons of higher quality. Perhaps they will find allies on Capitol Hill. If not, if Congress will not help the plucky dissidents, let it at least protect them from the usual treatment the Pentagon gives its whistle-blowers.

Other Opinion

Soviet Noises, U.S. Noises

With the Soviet Union suddenly waxing positively enthusiastic about arms-control talks it is worth asking what President Konstantin Chernenko is up to. In the past few days he has said it was "time to roll up one's sleeves and get down to business," hinted that there could be an early summit with President Reagan, and insisted that the Soviet Union was ready to adopt "radical solutions" to the arms race. Taken at face value the Kremlin is busy signaling a change of mood toward the United States and that it wants the Gromyko-Shultz talks in Geneva to be successful.

It is equally clear that despite the recent increase in the Soviet defense budget there are strong internal pressures pushing the Politburo to put a brake on military spending. Once again there was a rotten harvest and the country has an exhausted economic system to go along with exhausted old leaders. It may simply be that the Russians are interested in talking only to delay, or even cancel, Mr. Reagan's ambitious plans for space-defense technology. But it may also be that they now think they will get a fair deal on nuclear arms control generally from Mr. Reagan and from Paul Nitze, his highly experienced, and conservative, arms negotiator.

- The Daily Telegraph (London).

If the White House is serious about cutting the American defense budget — and the noises from Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger suggest that the President is indeed looking for 558 billion — there is a three-stage program open to it. Stage one is to announce that the Strategic Defense Initiative known as the Star Wars project is being re-examined. Stage two is to put this on the table at the Shultz-

Gromyko talks. Stage three is to abandon it. If the abandonment of Star Wars is the means to opening up a larger negotiating agen-da with the Russians then that will be a very substantial bonus. If not, the project should still be scrapped for the obvious reason that it will be a fiendish burden on the U.S. economy for years to come and is technically incapable. and almost logically so, of providing the United States with the security claimed for it.

— The Guardian (London).

Senator Barry Goldwater, a conservative and a long-time supporter of strong U.S. military forces, will be chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee when Congress convenes in January. When he calls for a freeze in military spending and an end to the MX missile program, it is bad news for Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Congressional Republicans and the White House staff have warned President Reagan that he cannot possibly fulfill his pledge to narrow the deficit solely through cuts in do-mestic spending. Restraints in defense spending will be required, too. Mr. Reagan is said to be reluctantly willing to go along.

Mr. Goldwater's stand will strengthen those in Congress who demand that the Pentagon share in the belt-tightening that is required. As for the MX, it manages to be both vulnerable and provocative, the worst possible combination. Mr. Goldwater's defection to the anti-MX bloc probably sounds the missile's death knell. But whether killing the MX would represent a long-term saving in the defense budget depends on whether arms-control talks make unnecessary the development of a less vulnerable, less provocative, but costly substitute.

1909: The Marines to Nicaragua? WASHINGTON - That the landing of a small force of American marines in Nicaragua would effectively turn the tide against President José Santos Zelaya and make doubly sure the success of the liberators under General Aurelio Estrada is the opinion of diplomatists. among them being Senor Salvador Castrillo, representing the provisional Government of Nicaragua in the United States. It is argued that American interests in Nicaragua are sufficient to warrant the State Department in landing marines, provided there is evidence of a condition of lawlessness and anarchy in the country controlled by President Zelaya. There is still grave fear for Americans in Nicaragua, which is accentuated by the lack of communications from the troubled zone.

1934: 13,000 'Reds' Killed in China

SHANGHA! - While the world continues to be preoccupied with the possibility of a Euro-pean conflict, 13,000 Communists are said to have been killed within the past two weeks in a war whose existence is unknown to the public at large. The dead men are soldiers in the Chinese Red armies being rounded up in Southern China. According to General Liu Chien Hsu. Commander of the Chinese First Route Army, 10,000 Communist troops were killed at Matzutu and Hsienshiu, General Li Sung Yen reported that 2,000 Reds had been killed in a battle which ended with the capture of the last Communist stronghold on the border of Kwangsi and Hunan provinces. These losses, together with previous Red losses, bring the total number of dead to 13,000.

As recently as 1981, the U.S. goods-and-services trade with the world was in balance. This year, it will be in deficit by $100 billion. If policy remains unchanged, that deficit could rise steadily to $200 billion to $250 billion annually by 1988-89. The impact is devastating.

The early stages of the erosion of trade accounted for three-quarters of the 1981-82 recession. In the third quarter of 1984, domestic demand continued growing at a healthy 5.7 percent but the gross national product rose by an anemic 1.9 percent because much of that demand was fulfilled by goods produced abroad.

Most dramatic is America's shift, in three years, from being the world's largest creditor country to the largest debtor country. Just two years ago. America's Trade Balance: A Growing Crisis

Again, the consequences are enormous. In-stead of earning $30 billion to $40 billion annually on our foreign investment. America will be paying $60 billion to $70 billion. The economy and foreign policy will be increasingly vulnerable to decisions made outside U.S. control.

The primary cause of these "external" problems is the internal budget deficit. Such huge federal spending, when added to reasonable levels of personal consumition and private invest. els of personal consumption and private investment, exceeds what can be produced domestically without reigniting inflation. American savings will not finance the needed level of private investment and the government imbalance. Hence, foreigners must supply and fund much of America's total demand, creating the huge trade and financial deficits.

Moreover, the Treasury's need to borrow about $1 billion every working day keeps interest rates (adjusted for inflation) far above historic levels. This draws vast amounts of internationally mobile money into dollar assets. The result is an enormous overvaluation of the dollar in terms of America's competitive ability.

Over the past four years, the dollar has risen by more than 60 percent against an average of the other major currencies. A Frenchman has to put up more than twice as many francs to acquire dollars to buy American products. An American can get three-quarters again as many Deutsche marks for his dollars, and so will buy German.

America is enormously taxing its exports, and subsidizing all imports coming into the country, through the exchange rate. Thus, it has virtually priced itself out of world markets. Correction of the exchange rate of the dollar, by about 30 to 35 percent from current levels. must become a central policy objective. But the cure can be painful. A precipitate fall of the dollar could take it further than needed, pushing inflation well into double digits and interest rates to intolerable levels. Such a dollar fall could thus trigger renewed recession.

It is essential that dollar correction occur as smoothly as possible. The only plausible approach is action in early 1985 to immediately start cutting the budget deficit by amounts that will total $100 billion to $150 billion annually within three to four years. This would permit real interest rates to decline substantially and pro-mote an orderly realignment of the dollar. It would also reduce the trade deficit directly by reducing the extent of government demand on the economy and the financial markets. America's international position will continue to erode rapidly, with enormous impact, unless drastic action is taken on the budget soon.

The writer, a former assistant secretary of the Treasury, directs the Institute for International Economics, a policy research institution. He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

NATO Can Get the Men There; Will They Have Bullets?

OSLO — While the balance of forces between NATO and the Warsaw Pact is a subject of considerable controversy, observers do agree on one point. Without substantial reinforcements, allied forces would have no chance of turning back a Warsaw Pact attack. Although the infrastructure program recently approved by NATO defense ministers will bring improvements over the rest of the decade, NATO's current preparations for employing reinforcements in combat are far less advanced than is generally realized.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization has long had plans for the deployment of substantial forces to the Continent. The most recent version of these is incorporated in what General Bernard Rogers, the su-preme allied commander for Europe, calls his Rapid Reinforcement Plan. In brief, this plan provides for the forward deployment of substantial American, British, Canadian and Portuguese ground and air forces.
The United States has made a commitment to deploy six divisions to Western Europe, in addition to the four already there. The British have promised nearly to triple the size of the British Army of the Rhine, which now numbers about 55,000 troops. The Canadians would reinforce their brigade in West Germany.

In the north, the U.S. Marine Corps has plans to deploy a brigade to Norway, along with supporting aircraft. Canada also has plans to deploy a brigade to Norway. The U.S. Army plans to deploy substantial forces to Denmark. Britain would deploy its Mobile Force brigade to Denmark and a commando brigade to Norway or to Atlantic islands such as the Faeroes. In the south, Portugal has plans to deploy a brigade to northern Italy.

In addition to these ground forces, there are elaborate plans to reinforce Western Europe quickly with a large number of American, British and Canadian aircraft. The lion's share, 1.200 to 1,500, would be American.

If these reinforcement plans were carried out, they would greatly strengthen NATO's hand in any crisis or conflict. The question, however, stockpiling of heavy equipment and expendable materials that would be consumed in combat. Most people have little idea of how much ammunition and other supplies are used in modern war. Sir Peter Whitely, a British general, has estimated that an American division would consume about 1,000 ions of supplies a day. Since American reinforcements loom so large in NATO's plans and information about them is least difficult to obtain, let us examine the situation they would be in if war were to start tomorrow.

Considerable equipment has been stored for four of the six army divisions scheduled to go to the central front, under a program called Prepositioned Overseas Materiel Config-ured in Unit Sets, or POMCUS. This means that the equipment is organized on the basis of a unit, such as a battalion. Each fall some of the U.S. units are flown to Europe, as they

If all the tanks, trucks and trailers

now stored for the four American divisions were lined up, they would stretch 300 kilometers (180 miles), or from Frankfurt to Munich. There are also plans to store equipment for two divisions in Belgium and the Netherlands, but the Pentagon is running into resistance in Congress. Congress is, however, well-disposed toward the Norwegian defense effort, so the program for preposi-tioning for the U.S. Marine brigade in central Norway is going lorward; but it is not expected to be completed for several years.

The U.S. Air Force has negotiated several agreements with allied air forces related to the rapid deployment of 1,200 to 1.500 aircraft to Western Europe in a crisis. These agreements come under the Co-Lo-

OTTAWA — Not unnaturally, the new Mulroney government interprets its huge September election victory over former Prime Minis

But does the landslide represent that much of a shift to the right? Mr.

Where Mr. Trudeau talked of pulling closer to Europe for business and investment relationships, Mr. Mulroney is staking his future on building a new rapport with

Britain Retreats on Student Aid Cuts

By Jo Thomas New York Times Service LONDON - A protest by middle-class students and their parents over proposed cuts in student aid has handed Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher a policy setback.

Sir Keith Joseph, the secretary for education and science, proposed cuts in the food and housing grants given to university students, regardless of their means.

He has rescinded a part of his plan that would have made well-todo parents pay part of their chil-dren's tuition and promised to consider government-backed student loans, which are not now available. Sir Keith's announcement followed a stormy meeting Tuesday with 270 members of his own Conservative Party.

Last week, a torchlight demonstration by 8,000 students brought parts of London to a standstill. For 22 years Britain has paid all tuition for students, which now ranges from $3,600 (£2,835) a year for a liberal arts student to $9,000 a year for a medical student. The country also has given grants for food, housing and transportation. The government now calculates that it costs a university student $2,130 a year to live - $2,520 in London - and students from lowincome families receive a grant for the entire amount. Even students from well-to-do families receive a minimum grant of $250. Although only a minority of the 354,000 university students receive $625 a year toward the tuition.

Tissot: Romance and Tragedy

By Max Wykes-Joyce International Herald Tribune

TONDON — There can be few more romantic, even L if melancholy, life stories than that of James Tissot (1836-1902). Born Jacques Joseph Tissot, the son of an affluent merchant in the port of Nantes, he studied art in Paris but showed his proclivity for England and Englishness by adopting the name James when he exhibited at the 1859 Paris Salon.

His early paintings were on medieval themes. In the 1860s came more up-to-date paintings of people dressed in Directoire fashions engaged in enjoyable pursuits, some of these tinged with a Japonisme which greatly influenced Parisian art in the 1860s, but which became more manifest in Tissot's work after he moved to England. Alongside the Directoire genre pieces, he from time to time attempted contemporary portraiture, as in the case of his "Portrait of Mile. L. L." also known as "Young Woman in a Red Jacket," now in the Musée d'Orsay collection in Paris and loaned to the Barbican for the exhibition.

By 1868, he acquired sufficient wealth to build himself a rather grand house in the Avenue de l'Impératrice near the Bois de Boulogne. In the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 he fought as a volunteer with the French army, and then in 1871, left a depleted Paris for the more agreeable environs of London.

There, with his talent for complex compositions encompassing all manner of meaningful detail, he soon achieved an enviable reputation as a painter of fashionable English society, enjoying itself at Mayfair soirées, at picnics or on holiday, or journeys down the Thames by luxurious excursion liners, with dances and masked balls on board.

These paintings of 1870s London are the center-piece of the 180-work exhibition, "James Tissot," at the Barbican Art Gallery, the first major show of his paintings since his lifetime.

Among the many beauties portrayed in these London paintings one ravishing young redhead stands out. This was Kathleen Newton, born at Agra, India, daughter of an Irish civil servant with the British East India Company, and mother of a young daughter by a divorced husband, the surgeon Isaac Newton. Her second child, a son, was in fact that of James Tissot, whose mistress she became in the summer of 1875. After seven ecstatic years, in which he many times portrayed her, her children, her sister, nieces and nephews, Kathleen died of unberculosis in November 1882, before her 29th birthday.

Devastated by the loss, Tissot returned to Paris, where he lived and worked for the rest of his career, apart from two journeys to the Middle East in the winter of 1886-1887, and in 1889, to make a suite of 365 watercolors and gouaches, illustrating of the life of Christ. First exhibited in Paris in 1895 and in London in 1896, they were bought in their entirety by the Brooklyn Museum in New York in 1900 for $60,000, a circumstance which caused Tissot's erstwhile friend Edgar Degas to refer to him as "the money changer in

In any event, Tissot thereafter concentrated on religious themes, though between 1883 and 1885 he made a series of paintings of fashionable Parisiennes, "La Femme à Paris: Pictures of Parisian Life." He also made etchings.

Beautiful as these are, Tissot never surpassed his portrayals of London life, of which "Holyday (The Picnic)," now owned by the Tate Gallery in London, is typical. Posed by friends and professional models at the garden poolside of the house in St. John's Wood which he shared with Kathleen Newton and their children, he lovingly portrays an elderly couple and their pretty daughters serving tea to three young men whose pillbox caps indicate membership of "I Zingari," an exclusive cricket club.

Its first exhibition in the opening show of the Grosvenor Gallery in 1877 provoked the snobbishness of Oscar Wilde, who spoke of the picnickers as "over-dressed, common-looking people." Wilde was even more disturbed by the array, on the picnic cloth, of the "ugly, painfully accurate representation of modern soda water bottles." He makes no mention at all of the delicate porcelain cups or the elegant silver tea set and

A Buddha Show Grows in Brooklyn

N EW YORK — Two things To that extent, he can justly be named "The Light of Asia." And it Brooklyn Museum. One is that it is would be an insensitive visitor who on the move in ways that can only did not become aware of a new delight us. The other is that there is serenity, a disposition to silence an immediate reason to go there, in that through Feb. 10, 1985, the Brooklyn Museum has an exhibi-tion called "The Light of Asia" that was previously shown with great success at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art and the Art Institute of Chicago.

Organized primarily by Pratapaditya Pal, senior curator at the Los Angeles County Museum, it traces the look of Buddha Sakyamuni, the founder of Buddhism, as it was magined by sculptors and painters ers prized Buddhist art for precisein India, Sri Lanka, Nepal, Tibet, Korea, China, Japan and elsewhere. It is a mark of the care and the diplomatic skills with which the choices were made that the 179 objects in the show come from more than 80 sources — the Brooklyn Museum itself not excluded in France, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, England, India, Japan, Thailand, Korea and the Unit-

The title is taken from a poem by Sir Edwin Arnold (1832-1904). This particular servant of light has always had trouble disentangling the syntax, let alone the sense, of Arnold's "Light of Asia," but the poem does nonetheless embody a general perception that has never ceased to be correct. The social and cultural traditions of Asia owe

To that extent, he can justly be that since the middle of the 19th century the image of the Buddha has fascinated American collectors, both private and institutional, and continues to do so today.

Some of them doubtless collected because they were students of Buddhism and wanted to have the real thing continually at hand. Othly the seraphic element that comes out so strongly at the Brooklyn Museum. The pictured appearance of the Buddha varied enormously from place to place, from age to age and from society to society. Some-times he was tall and slender, as in the 8th-century figure from Thailand that greets us at the entrance to the show, or in the representa-tions that were made in Bihar, India, in the 10th and 11th centuries. Sometimes he had an ample, almost womanly appearance, as in the sculpture that was made in ancient Gandhara (now Pakistan) toward the end of the first century A. D. As happened later in the case

But with a few exceptions such as these, we seem to hear throughout the angelic strains of Gluck's "Dance of the Blessed Spirits" from "Orfeo." As a change of pace from downtown Brooklyn, nothing could be more definitive.

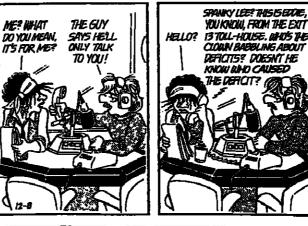

> Like Brooklyn itself, the museum is a national asset that should be spared any further dilapidation.

As much as any building in New York City, it has monumentality.
Up there on Eastern Parkway, it has been squaring its broad shoulders for the best part of a century. And now, under the directorship of Robert T. Buck, formerly director of the Albright-Knox Art Gallery in Buffalo, it is being thoroughly gone over. It has help from the city, but it also has help in ways which, though less weighty at the bank, are beyond price — the enthusiasm of a gifted staff, the potential of buge collections that are still largely unknown, and a local awareness that is growing day by day.

Unlike many another metropoli-tan museum, the Brooklyn Museum really does have a lot of great art stashed away in its reserves. (It is estimated to have no more than 10 percent of its holdings on view at any one time.)

It can mount an exhibition of Parisian haute couture - see the current exhibition of dresses by Madame Gres, which is on view through Jan. 6, 1985 - without paintings we see the Asian equivat of a Prince Hamlet who took in Egyptian and Oriental art it can compare with many a major European Museum. And where most museum shops show basically the gave up position, power, wealth same material, the Brooklyn Museand a proven mastery of the martial um shop shows original objects

Given the pacific subject matter of almost everything that is in the show, we find it easy, almost without knowing it, to slip into a dream world in which bad behavior plays no part. There is a 15th-century Iranian watercolor in which the birth of the not-yet-sanctified Buddha is shown to have been just as bloody as any other birth. And there is a remarkably graphic marble figure from China, dated from the Liao dynasty (907-1125 A.D.), in which the Buddha bears upon his chest and lap a complete spiritual autobiography in sculptural form. After so much that is specifically seraphic it is startling to come upon

But 'Macbeth' Is Better

'Traviata' Disappointing

By William Weaver International Herald Tribune

F LORENCE — The cheering started the moment the curtain went down Wednesday, concluding the premiere performance of the new Franco Zeffirelli production of Verdi's "Traviata," conducted by Carlos Kleiber, and starring the young Cecilia Gasdia, singing the title role for the first time.

The mere announcement of the names months ago had created immense excitement, and the audience in the Teatro Communale had gathered from all over Europe. Some of the spectators felt that the enthusiasm was misplaced. Zeffircili's sets and costumes were certainly dazzling but were they ap-propriate? And was the revolving stage, which was often noisy, absolutely necessary? There was a sense of straining for effect, much as there had been in the director's "Traviata" film.

Gasdia was understandably ner-vous, and her singing — notably in the first act — was more prudent than impassioned. She was producing notes, but she was not creating a character. Zeffirelli's staging made her do a lot of lurching, and she could hardly pass a piece of furniture without slumping onto it. Her movements always seemed studied, never natural. In one of the most moving passages of the last act, as she sang "Gran Dio Morir," she was clumsily groping her way

On the previous night, many members of the same audience had been in Naples, where the Teatro San Carlo was introducing its new season with a similary gala event: Verdi's "Macbeth" conducted by Riccardo Muti, staged by Sandro Sequi with sets and costumes designed by the sculptor Giacomo Manzu, and starring Renato Bruson and Elizabeth Connell. Here. too there was great anticipation. and, to a lesser extent, disappointment. In the past couple of years. under new mangement, the San Carlo has been struggling to regain a position of eminence. With this "Macbeth" it has firmly asserted its membership in the clite club of major European houses.

It was Muti's evening. The Verdi score blazed forth. Great swelling choruses (the first act finale was breathtaking) alternated with mo-ments of haunting mystery. Although he had announced earlier cancellation of a live telecast of the evening) Bruson appeared and sang at his very best: An imposing portraval of human weakness and exterior authority. Connell sang, confidently (except for the high note at the end of the sleepwalking scene, which she omitted), but her characterization was made up more. of grimaces and gesticulation than of inner urgency.

Her Lady Macbeth was a nag. not a tragic heroine. Veriano Lu-Even Kleiber's conducting chetti, playing Macduff, was a noble figure — and he sang with splendid clarity and style. For this darkest of operas, Manzu created a series of all-white sets — they ranged from merely unsuitable to downright silly. Under the circumstances, there wasn't much Sequi could do, and he didn't do much. But fortunately Muti, and the was a sound, but unromantic Alfre-transformed Neapolitan orchestra do. As the senior Germont, Giorgio swept all before them and made the evening memorable.

HAUTE COUTURE FOR TODDLERS WITH TASTE

n the '60s women joined the movement; in the '70s they joined health clubs; and in the '80s they had children. So did Pamela Plummer. After a series of successful careers, she became, at the age of 37, a first-time and full-time mother. But she wasn't content to stop there. While her work had given her a novel idea of motherhood, her motherhood gave her a novel idea for work. Plummer recognized herself as one of a growing corps of supermoms with new, sophisticated taste in clothing—and new ability to pay for it. In November she and Barbara Elimaker opened a smart children's boutique in New York City that sells custom-quality, fashionable clothing, accessories and haircuts-a sort of mini-Bendel's for toddlers.

The Shooting Star, between Prince and King streets on Sixth Avenue, had quite a simple genesis. Pamela Plummer couldn't find any dresses to suit the precocious tastes of her two-and-ahalf-year-old daughter Aria. "They all looked like hippyish, burlap sacks," Plummer says-and both she and Aria wanted style. "Aria likes to wear fancy dresses. She just begs to wear fancy dresses."

Inside her mother's sleek white boutique Aria's "fancy dresses" are the centerpiece. Handmade and heirloom-quality, they start at $125 and are designed by Hudacko, who, until Plummer found him, had specialized in custom work for adults only. Ulf Lundqvist, who worked with Plummer at Yves Saint Laurent, created the sportswear, the loungewear and some of the sweaters, too. A small but exquisite collection of iewelry shares the display area near the front entrance with hats by Kirsten Randolph. A couple of quick and creative haircutters shear wispy locks in another corner, and a few examples of some remarkable swings, created by Local Craftsman Steve Kahn, fill yet another part of the shop. The clothing is meant for children six and under (Plummer says she'll attend to older children next year). There isn't a single manmade fiber, machine-crafted item or standard bowl-cut head to be found in the place. "Everything is individually suited to the childfashionable, not stuffy," Plummer says. And, she hopes, attractive to other mothers like her. Now 40. Plummer can recall a lengthy list of the labels she's had: '60s college student; meditator, businesswoman (she worked for Revlon and for Bidermann Industries, the manufacturers for Yves Saint Laurent, Calvin Klein, Ralph Lauren and Karl Lagerfeld); wife (of Bidermann President Michel Zelnik); author (now at work on a book about her generation called The Changed Ones); mother; boutique owner. "They're really all part of the same thing," she says. "They're all creative identities. You just exercise more than one."

Aria, a small sleepy child with a tumble of gold-tinged hair, wanders into her mother's office—the renovated basement of a stately Village brownstone. As Plummer presents a muslin mock-up of a iumper and begins to point out the special detailing, Aria lightly runs a small wet finger along the hem.

"I want to wear this," a clear voice interrupts.

"You can when it's finished, but it's not ready yet. Why don't you go upstairs with Ana [the nanny] and comb your hair for school?"

Pamela Plummer supervised the design and fabrication of everything she sells, and Aria influenced a lot of the decisions she made. "If you're open to expanding your own base of wisdom, you can learn a lot from children. I've learned a lot from Aria. She has plishment. All our clothes were designed with these things in mind."

And designed fairly quickly, too. The same energy that has pushed Plummer into so many different careers has propelled Shooting Star from just the spark of an idea in January, 1984, into its opening 10 months later-an amazing feat considering that all the merchandise is developed exclusively for this store. "Yeah, Pamela Plummer was inspired by her daughter to open a children's boutique.

very definite opinions," Plummer says. "There are special things built into these clothes. They can be easily cleaned when they're dirty. They're loose-fitting and are meant to be layered because kids like Aria are so athletic they don't need the same sort of bulky warmth adults do. And they're easy to put on and take off. I've found that Aria really likes to dress herself, even at two and a half. It gives her a sense of accom-

AN OASIS OF SERENITY FOR JAPANESE CUISINE

Il over New York, it seems, restaurant-goers are huddling in culinary caverns. Dwarfed by cathedral-high ceilings, blocked by exposed architectural columns, they crane their necks in search of fleeting celebrities and shout above the trainstation hubbub as desultory waiters hide behind the potted palms. These are restaurants that give new meaning to the notion of dinner theater.

Enter Seryna, a year-old Japanese oasis of good cooking, civility and calm. Despite its pronunciation the restaurant's name does not mean "serene," but rather derives from a Greek word meaning fairy or sprite. The restaurant's owner, Noriaki Fujita, seems to have a predilection for non-Japanese names—he owns a place in Tokyo called Mon Cher Tonton. He also owns two Serynas in Tokyo and one in Yokohama, and he has plans for another to open in Los Angeles next year.

Inside Seryna, one is immediately embraced by Japanese hospitality. The first view is of a small cocktail area and a bar framed in smooth wooden forms reminiscent of waterfront pilings. In the main dining area blond wood walls and tables spaced for conversation lend an atmosphere of quiet privacy.

Scarcely has one been seated when a waitress arrives with a hot towel and a red lacquer tray with silver as well as chopsticks resting on a porcelain block. The menu, which does not change but is frequently augmented by daily specials such as a seasonal conch soup-a delectable blend of vegetables and tender morsels of that mollusk, served in its own shellhas a wide assortment of possibilities. Among them are the restaurant's two signature dishes, shabu-shabu and ishiyaki steak, both cooked at the table.

The former, a close relative of the Mongolian hot pot, features either crab or thinly sliced beef dropped briefly, along with seasonal vegetables, into a deeply flavored broth simmering in a handsome hammered-copper pot. These are then eaten with dipping sauces, one a spicy soysesame mixture, the other a blend of ponzu vinegar and lime. As a finale the scented, enriched broth is served in a small cup. The steak-either New York sirloin or filet mignon-is cooked on special stones brought from the hot springs area of northern Japan and preheated to 200° centigrade before being carried with great ceremony for use at the table.

More usual Japanese choices make up the rest of Seryna's offerings, which in these days of menu hyperbole can be almost too modestly described. Something called "boiled vegetables," for instance, is a jewel-like assortment of baby eggplant, elegantly cut in spirals; spinach and bean curd squares; lacy lotus root, and pumpkin and bamboo cut to resemble seashells. This delicately artistic presentation is typical: Chef Takahashi and his crew are as skilled at beautiful plates as they are with surehanded cooking technique. There are sushi and sashimi assortments, the latter including imported tuna and yellowtail as well as such less frequently found Please turn page items as slightly slithery sweet shrimp, all served on a bed of ice. There is beef sashimi too-rather like an Oriental carpaccio-and tempura dishes deep-fried to ethereal lightness. The seafood tempura assortment even includes some lobster.

Seryna's fish dishes—broiled, fried or steamed-are handled well. The red snapper is cooked whole in an herb-scented broth and festooned with clouds of scallion and cilantro. It's exemplary. Crab appears in many guises apart from the shabushabu as an hors d'oeuvre, in salad, in tempura, in shumai dumplings, sautéed with lemon and wasabi, as fried crab claws or the house special crab kohraage-stuffed in the shell and served with a sweet but quite wonderful sauce.

In both the private and the public dining rooms, Seryna's service may be its most appealing asset. The young, attractive staff lives up to one's idea of what service should be: discreet and helpful, cheerful but reserved, unobtrusive yet alert to every need.

Just now the proportion of Japanese to Western customers appears to be about two or three to one-a reassuring vote for the restaurant's authenticity. However, as more and more diners discover Seryna's felicitous blend of food and mood, the balance undoubtedly will tip toward hometown sybarites longing to come in from the hard-edged, high-tack gastronomic cold.

on his own, choosing both furniture and art that reflect either personal taste or personal work. Kirk Henckels collects hunting prints and memorabilia. Camilo Noguera collects contemporary South American painters, while Clifford Ross can hang his own art and sculpture in his sprawling Greenwich Village loft. Sure as they are of how they want their surroundings to look, most of these bachelors show considerably less certainty on the question of what they seek in a woman; indeed, after hearing half a dozen mumbled and modest responses, we chose to abandon the question altogether.

After much travel in Italy and the South Seas, he eventually converted an old factory in Seebuil near the Danish border into a house and studio. In 1906 he became a member of the German Expressionist group called Die Brücke and in 1908 joined the Berim Secession. Like other misguided romantics he sympathized with the Nazis, Martin Urban of the Nokle Foundation writes in the catalog. When Heinrich Himmler closed one of his shows in Germany, pro-paganda minister Joseph Goebbels opened it again. Nevertheless his works were put into the notorious "Degenerate Art" exhibition in Munich in 1937, and afterward more than 1,000 of them were sold abroad or burned. Unlike other Expressionists, Nolde refused to become a refugee and stayed on in Germany but never went to Berlin again. In 1938 he was forbidden to paint, but despite repeated police visits to his studio managed to paint a large number of watercolors Ten minutes later a superb Cub-ist Work "La Danseuse Russe" by not painted." Prices Close Off on Wall Street

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed moderately lower Fri-day on the final day of a dismal week of trading as investors remained unwilling to bid up even the price of blue chip stocks because of economic and monetary uncertainty. The Dow Jones industrial average, which has been led lower by Union Carbide this week, fell another 7.28 points to around 1163.21. For the week the blue chip indicator lost about 26

Union Carbide, a component in the Dow index, fell another 1% to 36% on turnover of 3.6 million shares, the second-heaviest volume of the day. Since a fatal poisonous gas leak at a Union Carbide plant in India earlier this week, the company's stock has come under intense selling pressure.

Marsh and McLennan fell 11/2 to 521/2. The company said it could not explain the action, but there were press reports that the firm in-sures Union Carbide.

Takeover candidates continued to intrigue nvestors. ITT rose 1/2 to 31% and topped the active list on turnover of more than 3.6 million shares. Irwin L. Jacobs, an investor, confirmed that he has been a heavy buyer of ITT shares over the past few days, rekindling takeover speculation. Traders said there are also rumors that the Pritzker family of Chicago and Anschutz Corp. have been accumulating stock.

Political Battle Looms in U.S. Merger Over Military Spending Cuts

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

EW YORK — The struggle to cut the budget deficit has begun. President Ronald Reagan has given the cabinet his proposals for cutting nonmilitary spending by $32 billion in the coming fiscal year. He wants to shrink the deficit to $100 billion by 1988, from about $200 billion

The president's plan for reducing civilian outlays includes a one-year, 5-percent pay cut for civilian federal employees and cutbacks in rural housing, school lunches, student loans, veterans' health benefits, farm price supports, crop insurance, the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, small-business loans, export-import loans, aid to families with de-

Mr. Reagan wants to omit in 1986 cost-of-living adjust-ments for black lung disability benefits, food stamps, workers' compensation for federal employees, veterans' benefits, railroad retirement, Civil Service retirement benefits and on military and civilian fronts Supplemental Security Income for the poor who lack Social Security protection. Ironically — but in keeping with his campaign promise — Mr. Reagan would keep full cost-of-living adjustments for Social Security pensioners.

The president has not disclosed his plans for trimming military spending. He wants to wait until next week after he has had a chance to discuss the military budget with Defense Secretary

Caspar W. Weinberger, who has been in Europe for a meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Administration sources say, however, that about $8 billion in military cuts will be required to achieve the president's goal of a $42-billion reduction in total spending next year. The military trims might reach, they said, $20 billion in 1987 and $30 billion in HESE figures imply a moderate reduction in the rate of increase of military spending. Military outlays climbed from $157.5 billion in 1981 to $266.2 billion this year and, according to the administration's budget for the fiscal year 1985, are planned to rise to $311 billion in the fiscal year 1986 and $409 billion in 1989. Budget authority for military spending would go up even more, reaching $456 billion in 1989.

Mr. Reagan's military plans have come under fire from Senator Barry Goldwater, the Republican of Arizona, who is regarded as a tough hawk on military matters. Mr. Goldwater, who is scheduled to become chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, told The Washington Post this week that the president should freeze military spending at last year's level and kill the MX

Coy Eklund, retired chairman of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, served as a member of the Presi-dent's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, led by J. Peter Grace. Mr. Eklund believes that there are enormous opportunities for eliminating waste in the military area, but he warns that doing so will be a herculean task politically.

For instance, the Grace Commission's report found that the Defense Department maintains some 5,600 separate installations and bases in the United States and worldwide. It found that, although the Pentagon's military and civilian employee population had been reduced from about five million people to three million, "significant base realignments and closures had virtually ceased since the mid-1970's."

Mr. Eklund says the Grace Commission found that, of the 3,000 domestic United States military bases, all but about 300 could be closed without harm to the nation's military needs. But the commission noted that "every state and almost 60 percent of all Congressional districts contain, or are adjacent to, military bases or other installations. The payrolls and procurement from these bases provide extensive benefits to the communities." Indeed, Mr. Weinberger often has stressed the economic benefits that flow from the Pentagon budget.

But the problem of closing bases does not lie just, or primarily, in the Pentagon. Congress has rigorously restricted the Defense (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1) the two companies reopened talks when International Harvester Co. agreed last week to sell its agricultural implements division to Ten-neco Inc. for $430 million in cash and stock.

The sources said Allis and Massey are talking about forming a new North American venture to jointly make and sell farm tractors and self-propelled combines.

They said both companies are seeking to spin off their North American farm operations by forming a new company in which by both Allis and Massey would eve a 50-percent share.

have a 50-percent share.

However, Massey would be the operating partner, Allis sources have said, noting an agreement might be obtained in early 1985. They also said any joint venture pact would require approval of Alhis and Massey creditors.

Allis' 75 bank and insurance creditors are set to meet next week in Milwankee with Allis officials to work out a new debt refinancing accord and approve restructuring of the firm's company operations.

Allis had attempted to sell its finance subsidiary to Security Pa-cific Corp. for $190 million, but the deal collapsed for undisclosed rea-sons. Allis now is holding merger talks with Massey in an effort to spin off Allis' farm group and re-store profitability to the parent firm, the sources added.

The sources noted the current Allis-Massey talks are the second

Earlier, Allis reportedly had been negotiating to supply Massey with high horsepower farm tractors for resale under Massey's own nameplate.

With Stock Price Dropping, Analysts Disagree Over Fate of Union Carbide

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Wall Street securities analysts disagree sharply about Union Carbide's prospects after the industrial accident in Bhopal, India. Although the price of Union Carbide shares has plummeted since Monday's fatal gas leak, some analysts said the market has overreacted.

All those who were interviewed Thursday agreed that the impact on the company will depend on whether legal liability is or seems likely to be established.

Union Carbide, a multinational company based in Danbury, Connecticut, said that it can cover all claims for compensation and damages resulting from the poisonous leak.

"The Bhopal tragedy is without precedent," the company said. "But considering both the insurance and other resources available, the financial structure of Union Carbide is not threatened." The company's director of health, safety and environmental affairs, Jackson B. Browning, read the statement but declined to say which insurance companies are covering Union Carbide, or how much coverage it has. He also declined to elaborate on what "other resources" might be used to pay compensation and damages to the victims in Bhopal. The reference appeared to point to factories, machinery, and other assets of the huge chemical company that could be sold off. Some experts have speculated that the company might be forced to seek protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. The conjecture has been been particularly apparent on Wall Street, where Union Carbide stock has fallen steadily since the initial reports of the Bho-

"The company categorically denies that it is considering seeking protection under the bank-ruptcy laws," said Union Carbide, which ranked as the 37th-largest industrial concern in the United States last year on the basis of $9 billion in sales. Union Carbide Corp. shares dropped $1.87 to $36.87 on Friday after falling $5.50 on Thursday. It was the second-most heavily traded on the New York Stock Exchange on Friday, when more than 3.6 million shares changed hands. Union Carbide was the most heavily traded stock on Thursday, at 6.7 million shares. Just 17 months ago, the stock sold for $74 a share.

In cases like this, stock goes in a trumel and doesn't come out for a number of years," said Brian R. Fernandez, senior vice president and director of research for Nomura Securities Inter-

He compared Union Carbide's situation to that of the Manville Corp., once the largest asbestos producer in the United States, which filed Chapter Il protection in 1982 after thousands of its workers contracted diseases they said were related to their work. Mr. Fernandez also made a parallel to Hoffmann LaRoche & Co., the Swiss company that he said suffered significantly after a plant it operated in Seveso, Italy, exploded in 1976 and released the chemical dioxin.

On the other hand, Salomon Brothers is now enthusiastic about the stock.

"At $39 a share, we're a buyer, not a seller," said (Continued on Page 15, Col. 4)

U.S. Jobless Rate Declined Steeply In November

By Jane Seaberry Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. unemployment rate fell to 7.2 percent in November from 7.4 percent, the sharpest decline since June and an indication to many economists that the recent economic slump will not become an outright recession.

The Labor Department reported Friday that the number of new jobs rose by 300,000 last month and the number of employed Americans climbed to a record 105.9 million. The number of people without jobs declined to 8.2 million from 8.4 million, the department said.

The unemployment rate now is below the 7.5-percent rate when President Ronald Keagan first took office and is at one of the lowest levels of his administration. The unemployment rate hit 7.1 percent in June, but then jumped back to 7.5 percent in July and been relatively unchanged since then.

The only other time the unemployment rate was as low as 7.2 percent during the Reagan administration was in April 1981.

The November employment fig-ures "continue to show dramatic improvement in the labor market situation for American workers un-der the Reagan administration," said Ford B. Ford, the undersecretary of Labor.

Many economists had said they expected the November unemployment rate to remain unchanged or rise as a result of the severe slowdown in economic activity. However, economists also said Friday that the unemployment rate often reacts several months after economic conditions change and that the rate could still rise in the next few

Janet L. Norwood, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor statistics, said that most of the increase in jobs occurred in the services sector, particularly in retail trade. Retail employment grew by more than 115,000, accounting for nearly 40 percent of the increase in jobs in November, Ms. Norwood said. In addition, the labor force grew

Ms. Norwood said that twothirds of the job growth in the past two years has been in the services sector and that manufacturing industries have only recovered about 70 percent of the jobs lost during the 1981-1982 recession.

"The number of factory jobs has grown very little since July of this year," Ms. Norwood said. In the last four months, 70,000 jobs were created in the durable goods industries, but that was partly offset by a decline of 60,000 in nondurables.

Construction employment increased by 30,000 last month and services other than retail trade showed an increase of 90,000 jobs, the Labor Department said.

"The decline in unemployment is somewhat surprising in view of the slowdown in the economy," said Jerry Jasinowski, chief economist for the National Association of Manufacturers. "While unemployment is continuing to decline, there have been virtually no gains in manufacturing employment since

State Court Prevents Phillips From Blocking Takeover Bid

NEW YORK - A Delaware court issued a temporary order Friday to prevent Phillips Petroleum Co. from blocking the start of an unsolicited $9.1-billion takeover bid.

A day earlier, an Oklahoma court issued an order to block the akeover group, led by T. Boone Pickens, a Texas oilman, from proceeding with its bid to increase its holdings in Phillips. Friday's temporary restraining order barred Phillips from taking any steps to enforce the Oklahoma order. It also barred Phillips from raising the same issue in any court outside Delaware. The takeover group has notified the Securities and Exchange Commission that it intends to seek the removal of Phillips' board. The assault on Phillips, the eighth largest U.S. oil company, was launched Tuesday by Mesa Partners, which is made up of Mesa Petroleum Co. and the independent oil firm of Wagner & Brown. [Mesa Partners said that it had obtained commitments from banks for the full $800 million of margin borrowings it was seeking for its proposed tender offer for Phillips Petroleum shares, Reuters reported rom Amarillo, Texas. [As a result, Mesa said its tender offer will be for 23 million Phillips shares at $60 each, which, together with the 8.9 million already owned, would give it about 21 percent of Phillips.]

After two days of negotiations in Vienna, bankers agreed to resched-ule $3.3 billion in debt coming due between 1985 and 1988, according to Fulvio Dobrich, a senior vice president of Manufacturers Hano-ver Trust Co. and chairman of an international coordinating com-mittee of Yugoslavia's Western bank creditors.

Details of the package will be completed at the next round of talks, to be held in London during the week of Jan. 7, Mr. Dobrich

NEW YORK — The U.S. gov-ernment bought a total of $280 million in Deutsche marks on three separate occasions in September and October, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York reported.

In addition to the four-year package, the banks agreed to grant a delay on principal payments for debt coming due in January, Mr. Dobrich said. As a result, Yugosla-via can delay until the end of March repayment of $205 million in loans that come due on Jan. 17. The banks will also leave open a deadlines that might have over-whelmed it at the beginning of Mr. Dobrich said a two-stage arrangement will be worked out be-tween Yugoslavia and the IMF. The first stage will be a new standby agreement extending from April 1985, when the current agreement ends, to April 1986. It will then be replaced by a second, longer-term arrangement that will extend through 1988 alone with the commercial banks' multi-year rescheduling. This second stage, called an "enhanced monitoring arrangement," will be negotiated by the IMF, the commercial banks and Yugoslavia.

We know for sure the price of oil will jump, and go up sharply," the Saudi oil minister, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani said at a press conference with Kuwait's oil minister, Sheikh Ali Khalifa al-Sabah.

This was not the first time Sheikh Yamani and Sheikh Ali Khalifa have affirmed their faith in the cartel's future and their conviction that world market conditions would improve. But the timing of their remarks suggested that the two ministers were preparing moves to strengthen OPEC's position.

The ministers agreed in October to cut production to 16 million barrels per day from 17.5 million in an effort to prop up world oil prices and protect the benchmark price of $29 per barrel for light Arabian crude. Saudia Arabia and Iraq's quotas remained the same and Nigeria did not accept a reduction. But other member nations agreed to reduce production from 4.2 percent to 14 percent.

One problem OPEC faces in fixing differentials between light and heavy crudes is that an end to the British coal miners' strike would result in a significant cut in heavy fuel oil prices. Thus any agreement on differentials could only be provisional, the firm's latest market

There is an element of unpinning in Jonathan D. Spence's "The Memory Palace of Matteo Ricci," an account of the confrontation of the 16th Century Jesuit missionary with Ming Dynasty China. Spence's story is fascinating, his material is rich and varied, and he works with a remarkable spirit of It has undone him, just a little.

By trying for too much, perhaps, his book tangles upon its own structure; its virtues stub toes upon their aspirations. Instead of using a chronology to frame the beguil-ing 27-year duel between two kinds of mandarins —

European and Chinese - Spence takes a more imaginative course: the memory palace of his title. What is a memory palace? It is a device evolved from the Romans through the Middle Ages and up to the Renaissance for making possible the feats of memory that have so long been the attribute of the educated. The memory palace was one of the intellectual gadgets, along with sundials, clocks, maps and the scholarly bent of the Jesuits, that Ricci brought along to win over his suspicious Chinese hosts. (Their own hierarchy by written examination rested largely on proficiency in memorization.)

To remember names, for instance, you would imagine a room, and place the faces around it. A memory palace could be hundreds of rooms, each filled with images, phrases, ideas or facts arranged like furniture. Memory became a mental walk. Ricci was able to amaze the Chinese scholars by reproducing a list of hundreds of ideographs after reading it once. Then he would do it backward, by walking around his "palace" the other way.

Spence organizes his book in eight main sections, each headed by a pictorial image. Four of these are biblical prints that Ricci gave to a Chinese printer as specimens of Western art. The other four are images, each in the form of a ideograph, which he placed in one room of his memory palace book. Both the prints and the memory palace images symbolize Spence's divisions.

Ricci was an enormous success with his intellectual wares, his clocks and his sundials. Except for an occasional popular stoning or official snub, he was something of a social lion. He would receive as many as three dinner invitations a day to dispute with Confucian and Buddhist scholars. His transla-

In Spence's nourishing portrait, we see a prodigious effort and prodigious optimism. Ricci offered his humanism in the hope that it would lead to conversion. He was as tactful as possible, stressing Christ as teacher and prophet rather than as crucified God. It was really "not good to have someone looking like that," a Chinese friend told him upon seeing the tormented image of Christ on a crucifix. There were some conversions, including those of several influential officials. By and large, though, China accepted the clocks and sent back the mes-

For one thing, Spence is rather cloudy as to just what use Ricci put the four images in his memory palace book. Presumably, they were a means of memorizing ideographs, but Spence gives such poetic weight to them that the reader keeps struggling to discover other signifi-

and important as the discussion of recess interes-tual exchanges with the Chinese scholars, or the account of his religious efforts.

Paradoxically, a more prosaic organization might have allowed freer play to the genuine fascination of Spence's book. The memory palace tends to con-

The use that Spence puts them to, of course, is as thematic headings. Elegant as this may be, it tends to force his story. We keep moving back and forth trade, learning and so on. A certain incoherence is the result, and some natural trains of thought are chopped up and lost. It would have been interesting to have some description of previous missionary efforts in China, for example, or some account of what happened after Ricci's death.

Furthermore, the pictorial division tends to give equal treatment to topics of widely varying interests. The war section is nowhere near as nourishing and important as the discussion of Ricca's intellec-

A Defense of Boxing, the 'Purest of All Sports'

New York Times Service NEW YORK - When his counseling group is in session, Wilbert McChure seats his clients in a circle from which there is no easy escape. The members are urged to confront one another's defenses, not much differently from the way McClure gained his Olympic gold medal in a squared boxing ring in Rome

"People are afraid of conflict," he says. "It evokes shudders in them. Today we don't smash people in the face, so we start whisper-ing campaigns against them. We try to get the best of them in subtle ways, which to me is more despicable," As a psychologist, Wilbert McClure, Ph.D. deals with "modest human neuroses" the way he was taught in school. But he acknowledges that his career has been strengthened by his former life as Skeeter McClure, amateur champion and professional middleweight contender.

"Everything I have today, I owe to boxing," he says. "Not the money. Boxing taught me other lessons. To me, boxing is the purest of all sports. It reduces everything to who's the better person, who's learned the lessons, who's had the best teachers."

His roommate and his best friend in the amateur days was known as Cassius Clay. Wilbert McClure hears the shurred speech of Muhammad Ali 10day, and he reads articles about his old friend's perhaps suffering from Parkinson's syndrome.

He also read Thursday that the American Medical Association, meeting in Honolulu, had called for the abolition of boxing, both amateur and professional. Some writers, including this one, have argued that society should ban a sport that causes so much exploitation and injury. But just as Floyd Patterson argues that boxing was the only way out of poverty for him, and just as Jose Torres can point to the literary life that boxing opened for him, so McClure can credit boxing for his place in life.

"I am suspicious of do-gooders who condemn boxing without being involved in it."

After the 1960 Summer Games, McClure finished his last year at the University of Toledo. And, after turning pro, he went into the army. He recalls: "I sent Ali a letter saying, "Why don't you join a Reserve unit, do your thing in summer camp, and keep your title? Then he gets up in front of the world and says, 'I ain't got nothing against them Viet Coogs.'

"He was like the Pied Piper of the 1960s. He influenced a lot of people. If it wasn't for boxing would be have been able to do that? "Ali doesn't complain. People say, "Tsktsk,' but he's walking around, doing his thing.

He knows it was his decision. He fought for two generations, and that's too long. But if you ask him, he'd tell you he'd do it all over

And so would Wilbert McClure, who won his first 14 professional fights but then lost twice to Luis Rodriguez, once to Jose Torres and once to Rubin (Hurricane) Carter. He thinks he was pushed too quickly, that he learned to lose before he could learn to win. He retired with 23 victories and eight losses, and sent himself to Wayne State University in Detroit for his doctorate.

Now, based in Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts, he is a consultant to industry and gov-

To critics who have suggested that society should offer better choices than boxing rings to disadvantaged young men, McChire says:

"For some young people, growing up in tough situations, it's hard to have a dream that hies outside athletics. There are thousands of young men in the gym who would love to be champion. They're afraid of losing, but they're not afraid of being hurt. Never enters their mind."

"I don't believe I ever hurt anybody in society except maybe the man in the ring, through the use of my ability. If that's true, I'd tell people, 'Don't deny me the opportunity to be somebody, to travel, to help myself. I want to be somebody."

Hoyt won the Cy Young in 1983 with a 24-10 record and helped the White Sox win their first American League West title. But, like many of the White Sox players, he slumped in 1984, finishing with a 13-18 record and a 4.47 earned run average as Chicago finished fifth in the AL West.

A source said San Diego will give Hoyt a five-year contract that will earn him more than $1 million a

Meanwhile, Bruce Sutter, the National League's No. 1 relief pitcher, was meeting Friday with Ted Turner, the owner of the Atlanta Braves, and was expected to sign the most lucrative contract ever given a pitcher, up to $9.6 million over six years.

Sutter, who became a free agent after four years with the St. Louis Cardinals, is not the only free agent Turner is pursuing. He also has his sights set on Rick Sutcliffe, the most attractive starting pitcher in the Nov. 8 draft.

"That's bad. Without second home interest deductions we can all say goodbye to Florida. Will the new tax reform plan cut down on the budget deficit?"

"No. it has nothing to do with deficits. They call it revenue neutral.' It won't bring in any more money to the Treasury, but they claim it will be much fairer for the poor people." "That's good," I said.

"Not necessarily. The poor people depend on private charity to keep their heads above water. Under the flat tax the first 2 percent of everyone's gross income is not deductible if you make a charitable donation. Very few people give more than 2 percent of their gross to charity. So with all the cutbacks in government services that Reagan has proposed, the private sector won't be able to take up the slack to provide a safety net for the poor. Hospitals, universities, foundations and all cultural institutions are in the same boat."

Madman Muntz, the Merry Madcap

By Steve Harvey Las Angeles Times Service OS ANGELES - Before

Ralph "Hi Friends" Williams, before Cal Worthington and his dog Spot, even before Chick Lambert and his dog Storm (which really was a dog), there was Earl (Madman) Muntz, dressed in Napoleonic hat and red long johns, peddling cars with this line:

"I want to give them away, but Mrs. Muntz won't let me. She's Seven Mrs. Muntzes and a couple of fortunes have come and gone since those days in the mid-1940s when Madman Muntz reigned as a symbol of car-loony Southern California.

A running joke with comedians - Bob Hope mentioned him on his radio show 35 of 37 weeks one year - Muntz was the first (and, so far, only) car dealer ever to have his name spelled out at the Rose Bowl. His downtown auto showroom was a regular stop for four buses, which would pull up in front of a billboard that said: "I buy 'em retail and sell 'em wholesale. It's more fun that way!"

He is 70, now, but the emperorin-long-johns symbol still stares out everywhere from his stereo store where he continues to put in a full week.

And although he does not appear on television or radio anymore ("People know the name by now"), the Madman likes to think he hasn't gone completely sane.

He will talk to anyone who phones. ("I'll fire any employee who asks the name of the person that's calling.") He hates to hire college graduthem a living"), and he's assembling a museum to honor himself. And, of course, he's come up with yet another slogan: "Muntz: the oldest living name in video." Older than RCA? "It says liv-ates ("They think the world owes

ing name," he barks in his raspy voice. "Think about it. There never was a Mr. RCA or Mr. Philco. Sanyo's also a corporation name. So is Hitachi." Always yearning for a new venture, he's selling giant screen tele-vision, cellular car telephones and satellite receivers (which he confidently predicts will eventually put cable television out of

He's into his 14th or 15th career, following Muntz Television (he named his daughter Tee Vee), Muntz Stereo-Pak (car stereo systems) and such colorful washouts as the Muntz Motorcycle Park, Muntz All-Aluminum Homes (he lost interest after building II of them) and Muntz Motor Mansions (he curses the тетогу).

"I'm not manufacturing a damn thing now, just merchandising," he says, sounding some-what relieved. "Well, there is the Muntz Video Enhancer — you can use it to copy tapes of bad quality and make a better duplicate. I designed it and we sent it to Japan to manufacture, but they were three years late in delivering and, well, sales haven't been that good."

Still with a flair for showmanship, he's planning to drive a Muntz Jet in the Hollywood Christmas Parade and, as usual, he's dating a star. "Going with her now," he says, plopping down a copy of "The Joys of Aging and How to Avoid

Them" by Phyllis Diller. "She's a friend Earl stereooed my entire body. Love, Phyllis."

It's the Madman - a high school dropout from Elgin, Illinois — who raved the way, so to speak, for the legions of off-beat car salesman to follow into television. As the authors of "America's Auto Dealer" say: "His slogans, the bombardment of the Muntz musical jingles over radio, the billboards — they established a trend that revolutionized the sales approach for dealers willing to doff their business pinstripes and make like a sideshow bark-

Actually, Muntz was just plain Earl when he went into business at age 15. A tinkerer and inventor as well as a salesman, he was customizing radios and installing them in automobiles. He graduated to used cars and migrated to Los Angeles in the early 1940s. Falling under the spell of Hollywood, he hired a young advertis-ing man named Mike Shore, who invented the Madman persona. Soon Muntz was shouting ute radio ads a day in Southern California. Car sales reached $72 million one vear.

The British Library said Thurs-day that it has bought the papers of Princess Diana's family, the Spen-cers of Althorp, for an undisclosed sum, believed to be several hundred thousand pounds. The papers date back 400 years, fill 300 feet (91 meters) of shelving and "contain historical material of the greatest importance," the library said in a news release. The sale is the latest in a string of disposals of paintings, silver and furniture from the family mansion of Althorp since the 8th Earl Spencer, now 60, married his second wife, Raine McCorquodale, in 1976. Funds were needed for a £1 million ($1.2-million) refurbishment of the 100-room house ordered by the countess, who is Princess Diana's stepmother.

Norman Granz, who produced many of Count Basie's records, was one of the busiest bidders at an auction of jewelry from the estate of the jazz great and his wife, Catherine, in New York, Granz paid $1,500 for a gold identification bracelet engraved on the front with "The Chief" and on the back "love, Ella," a gift from singer Ella Fitz-Letters. They will fill the chairs gerald, and $1,500 for a watch he gave to Basie and inscribed "To the Count from Norman," Catherine Lillian Hellman. The 50-member Basie's 10-carat engagement ring academy, chartered by Congress in brought in $44,000 — more than 1916, is the highest honor society double its pre-sale evaluation. Altogether the sale of watches, necklaces, and bracelets brought more els as "Tobacco Road" and "Geor- than $135,000.
